where rows of rookeries stood in the slums, wholesome model homes are built. The Seif-Help Settlement spreads the light of knowledge, happness and industry far and wide. Already it covers a city block, and its branches are scattered here and there throughout the congested districts of the great city. With their wealth Helen and her husband help those who help themselves, and this is the true uplifting philanthropy.

thropy.

On bright days a bent, decrepit man hobbles to a bench in Central Park, attended only by a deaf servitor as aged, as bent, as helpless as himself.

It is the senile paralytic, Jaffrey Brenton, a biotch in the sunlight.

Sometimes he rouses to mutter, "Yes. Richard, my son, you shall marry the girl!" But for the most part he sits silent gazing at his finger tips.

What would Jaffrey Brenton have done with a million a year?
